

Multigenerational Conversation Openers

mfs.com

How do you meet the adult children of your clients?

Your success in getting in front of the next generation is critical both to you and your clients.

Here are several approaches from top investment professionals who have been successful in getting introductions to the next generation. What is notable is that they have developed relationships with their clients' adult children and now typically manage their assets as well.

Choose the ideas that suit your personality and get in front of the inheritors today!

The two-step

Step one: Call the client. "If, at some point in the future, I have questions or concerns about your health or capacity, which one of your children do you want me to reach out to? Devan? Great, then I would like to reach out to Devan this week. I won't talk about your assets or financials, but I do think it's important that Devan understands what it is that we do together, what we've put together for the family as a whole and, most importantly, what Devan can count on me for during a time of crisis. Would that be OK with you?"

Step two: Call the adult child. "I've had the pleasure of working with your parents for the past 15 years. During a recent conversation, your parents indicated that you'd be the one to contact in the instance of incapacity. It's important that you have a good idea of what I do for your parents, and I'd like to set up a brief meeting so that we don't first meet under stressful circumstances."

Later: "I would like to add you to my mailing list so that you can see the things that your parents receive from me. I won't spam you and will only send something out about four times a year."

Reconstructing the family tree

"Alex, it's been a while since we've had a serious conversation about your family. Help me reconstruct your family tree. Where are the children? What are they doing? How do you feel about leaving money to them?"

Typically the client will then talk about their concerns.

"If you feel it's appropriate for me to meet with your children and get a plan started for each of them, I'd be happy to. Frankly, I'd like to start now."

Alex may say, "What are you going to charge me?"

"Nothing. Initially, I just want you to know that I'll teach them how to work toward making financially sound decisions. Would you like me to help your children the way I help you?"

Who is the alpha child? (version one)

"Do you rely on any of your children for help in making financial decisions at this point? Do you suppose that in the future you'll depend upon one of your children to help with this?"

The client will commonly respond, "In the future, absolutely."

"Well, I would like to meet that child now so we don't first meet under stressful circumstances. And I would like them to join us for a meeting or two to be able to see the relationship that we have."

See the reverse side for other important information.

Multigenerational Conversation Openers

Who is the alpha child? (version two)

Some investment professionals feel that the best time to open these conversations is when clients are over 70, as they are more motivated or interested at that age. Additionally, the intent is to meet with the right adult child.

“Even though you have no serious or life-threatening health problems right now, which of your children would you like me to talk to if something comes up? I’d really like to avoid meeting him or her under stressful circumstances. I think you’d agree with that, yes?”

Leading with a conversation on legacy planning

It is typically a conversation about legacy planning that gets you in front of the next generation. You are already talking about where the client wants the assets to go: “So, what organizations, charities or community projects would you like to leave money to? What about your children? What are your plans for leaving money to them?” Some say they plan to leave it all to their children; some say they would like to leave a portion to their children; and some express concerns at this point. The conversation might then proceed as follows.

“Now that we’ve talked about Jordan and Carson (the adult children), I would like to meet with them for two specific reasons. First, I want to introduce myself, let them know you and I work together and see if I can be helpful to them in any way. Second, I would like to make myself available to answer any questions on how you and I work together on planning. Would that be all right with you?”

Most clients say, “That’s a good idea. I would like you to walk my children through what we do.” Or they object, which can be instructive. For example: “You shouldn’t tell Carson anything. Carson will just mess things up. On the other hand, you might want to share everything with Jordan, who is fully capable of handling this when we get older.” Ultimately, you are searching for the child you want to align yourself with.

Conversation closers

Always have a great proof statement and closer when speaking with the adult children of your clients: “As your parents’ investment professional, I do three things:

- “I help them plan for the things we know will happen (death and taxes).
- “I help them anticipate and plan for the things we hope will happen (retirement, family education and legacy).
- “I help them try to protect themselves against the things they fear could happen (disaster, incapacity or early death with dependents/special needs).

“Allow me to assist you with any or all of these things.”

For help with this and any other business-building ideas, please call your MFS® partners at 1-800-343-2829 (US) or at +1 617 954 6450 (non-US).

Please follow your firm’s approval process to obtain approval for any sales ideas or marketing materials you would like to use with clients.

Unless otherwise indicated, logos and product and service names are trademarks of MFS® and its affiliates and may be registered in certain countries.

Distributed by: U.S. - MFS Investment Management; Latin America - MFS International Ltd. Note to UK and Switzerland readers: Issued in the UK and Switzerland by MFS International (U.K.) Limited (“MIL UK”), a private limited company registered in England and Wales with the company number 03062718, and authorised and regulated in the conduct of investment business by the UK Financial Conduct Authority. MIL UK, an indirect subsidiary of MFS®, has its registered office at One Carter Lane, London, EC4V 5ER. Note to Europe (ex UK and Switzerland) readers: Issued in Europe by MFS Investment Management (Lux) S.à r.l. (MFS Lux) – authorized under Luxembourg law as a management company for Funds domiciled in Luxembourg and which both provide products and investment services to institutional investors and is registered office is at S.a r.l. 4 Rue Albert Borschette, Luxembourg L-1246. Tel: 352 2826 12800. This material shall not be circulated or distributed to any person other than to professional investors (as permitted by local regulations) and should not be relied upon or distributed to persons where such reliance or distribution would be contrary to local regulation.

FOR INVESTMENT PROFESSIONAL AND INSTITUTIONAL USE ONLY. Should not be shown, quoted, or distributed to the public.

MFS FUND DISTRIBUTORS, INC., MEMBER SIPC, BOSTON, MA MFS_FWOPEN_SFL_7_25 28839.14